

Semester Project 2

Design

What went well on the project

Compared to previous projects, I felt much more comfortable coding my initial designs. The discrepancies between the original design and result are much more conscious choices. I quickly developed my idea for the feel of the site, with the color palette, typography choices, and overall feel. Looking back at my art boards, I do feel the initial design was a bit overwhelming, so the final result is consciously a toned down version of it. The artboards are attached to the report. Apart from that, I found that working on how to bring to life the designs was easier than previously.

What was difficult/didn't go well on the project

Some discrepancies, especially in line with the admin only access content, are due to a lack of capabilities and time to complete the design, such as the combination of buttons and icons. Due to some technical difficulties I will explain further down, I find my pages to lack further actions.

What would you do differently next time

In line with the issues mentioned above, for next project I want to make sure I am able to complete/figure out how to implement the functionalities envisioned. I also feel I could try more of a “less is more” approach with a focus on white space on the pages. As I will explain further, my focus on technical work has left me with less time than I would have needed to thoroughly work on the finer details on the design.

Technical

What went well on the project

My understanding of Javascript and its functioning had improved over the course of this project. Many issues I had previously have gotten easier, such as work with local storage or the various types of api requests.

I also decided to focus on the technical aspect of the website prior to the design, as it has been a bigger weakness previously. I found that approach much better and it helped me structure my work process. As with certain functionalities I had difficulties with, I had a much easier time trying to figure out the right approach.

In addition, choosing to complete level II of the semester project, I wanted to make sure the strapi was publicly hosted early and that there wouldn't be any last minute challenge before delivery. I also knew it would add some small changes to my code and api calls, which are easy to adapt, yet knowing the potential to misspell/miss something, I did not want to debug at this scale right at the end of the project. This shifted focus to the more technical aspects first, which helped me tremendously and I will continue this way on other projects.

What was difficult/didn't go well on the project

I still have some difficulties implementing certain functionalities. As mentioned above in the design part, I also had some additional thoughts I wanted to implement, but was not able to. Trying up until the very last day, I decided to remove these parts from my code. For example, I was in the process of figuring out how to add/remove the amount of an item in the shopping bag, as well as removing only that particular item. In addition, I was working on how to filter the products display by either brand or style, as well as using the enter key on my search input, as well as displaying it on all pages.

What would you do differently next time

Overall in the project, I think I still can improve my time management skills, as well as my expectations for what should be achieved. I begin by visualizing all the goals I want to achieve, and as the deadline snuck up, I had to give up these. Hopefully, I will work further on these that can be added for the portfolio updates.
